

II Report of the Pontifical Commission for the Protection of Minors: Justice, Conversion, Reparation

November 17, 2025

On 16 October 2025, the Pontifical Commission for the Protection of Minors published the Second Annual Report on the Church Policies and Procedures for Safeguarding, which contains data on the fight against abuse of vulnerable people in the year 2024<sup>1</sup>.

The body – established by Pope Francis with a chirograph of 22nd March 2014 and currently operating at the Dicastery for the Doctrine of the Faith, pursuant to article 78 of the Apostolic Constitution. Praedicate Evangelium – over the years, has carried out a long work of analysis of the practices adopted at the level of the universal Church and particular Churches to prevent and sanction abuse and to give back to victims a space to listen, a recognition of their dignity and support in the difficult process of inner healing<sup>2</sup>.

At the beginning of the document, the President of the Pontifical Commission proposes "perpetual pilgrimage" as an image of the Church's mission in this sector, thus emphasizing the common journey that must be made both by ecclesiastical institutions and by the faithful involved in various capacities, in becoming neighbors of the "survivors".

The key words of the Report are "justice", "conversion" and "reparation", which in terms of concrete measures are expressed – in addition to the duty of financial compensation in favor of victims – in the provision of counseling centers, in the offer of psychological support, in the public recognition of responsibilities and in the request for apologies, in transparent communication to victims on the status of the proceedings concerning their cases and in the participation of the victims in the improvement of protection standards<sup>3</sup>.

If we look at the structure of the publication, four sections should be highlighted: the first, more substantial, reports the account relating to the local Churches, belonging to eighteen episcopal conferences, including the Italian one, and to two religious institutes; the second takes into consideration the continental realities (Africa, Asia/Oceania, America, Europe); the third focuses on the Roman Curia and, in particular, the Dicastery for Evangelization; the fourth examines the Work of Mary – Focolare Movement, as an example of lay association. The appendix explains the financial situation of the Commission and gives news of The Memorare Initiative, with which the Bishops' Conferences, religious orders and philanthropic foundations can contribute to supporting the local Churches in the fulfilment of their obligations related to the protection of minors.

Given the complexity of the profiles and methodological approaches used, I will focus on sections one and three.

On the side of data collection at the diocesan level, the Commission, on the one hand, has supplemented the documentation required for the visit ad limina with a special questionnaire, and on the other, has strengthened control over the guidelines approved by the bishops' conferences.

The observation conducted on the CEI and on seven regional episcopal conferences (Emilia-Romagna, Tuscany, Sardinia, Lazio, Lombardy, Liguria, Sicily) is of particular interest: in fact, a varied picture emerges, marked by peaks of excellence in the implementation of good practices, in cooperation between institutions inside and outside the Church and in the involvement of qualified personnel, but also clouded by gray areas, which denote a lack of awareness, persistent blaming of victims and a lack of transparency in the management of cases<sup>4</sup>.

Among the recommendations, the Commission reiterated the invitation for Italian dioceses to make themselves available to share information with the competent dicasteries of the Holy See and to carry out constant monitoring of policies and procedures for the protection of minors; moreover, it has called for a greater commitment to facilitate complaints to the civil authorities, also with the intermediation of ecclesiastical structures, and to weave networks with associations engaged in the fight against abuse. Finally, the Commission emphasized the selection of candidates for Holy Orders and aspirants to consecrated life, so as to prevent the lack of vocations from leading to hasty and potentially prejudicial choices<sup>5</sup>.

Even at the level of the Roman Curia, some critical issues are highlighted, one of which calls into question the motu proprio Vos estis lux mundi<sup>6</sup>. The plurality of jurisdictions that intersect in the pontifical provision would cause, according to the Dicastery for Evangelization, overlapping competences and confusion in the handling of complaints<sup>7</sup>. Moreover, at the moment of plantatio Ecclesiae and in the initial moments of the life of the new ecclesial circumscriptions, it would be difficult to demand standards of protection that are not even attained in territories of more deep-rooted Christian tradition; finally, there is a complaint about the scarcity of resources for the evaluation of candidates for the episcopate in mission lands.

The panorama that the Report presents to the reader, therefore, is constantly evolving: at the legislative level, reforms have strengthened repressive options and have put the spotlight on the obligations of transparency, collaboration and reparation; the bishops have gradually acquired elements to take effective decisions; the whole People of God have been called across the board to deal with the scourge of abuse. Nevertheless, as Benedict XVI has already pointed out, the urgency to “to establish the truth of what happened in the past, to take whatever steps are necessary to prevent it from occurring again, to ensure that the principles of justice are fully respected, and above all, to bring healing to the victims and to all those affected by these egregious crimes”<sup>8</sup>.
